Insurance Lawyers Richmond - If an insurance company violates the terms of a written contract you are eligible to take legal action. Nonetheless, the court usually only forces the insurance company's to pay what it would have owed you under contract.

Nevertheless, if the insurance firm has intentionally delayed or withheld payments you could be entitled for extra-contractual damages. These can be awarded because of the insurance company fabricating or ignoring proof as well as giving a partial investigation of your claim. The damages granted comprise costs like interest payments and the loss of RRSPs, as well as compensation for mental suffering. Punitive and exemplary damages are granted when insurance firms show particularly malicious conduct.
