The injury from the workplace and making claims for the injury is often emotionally and physically hard. This is because the hurt person must also peruse an injury claim whilst likewise suffering from the injury.

Under the workers insurance system, personnel are given guaranteed compensation for accepted claims in exchange for giving up their right to file a suit against work-related injuries. The employer finances the program through premiums. This is of benefit to the employer, who is given protection from lawsuits under this system of collective liability. Hurt workers along with their love ones are given fair compensation, whilst expenses are spread among employers.

Personnel could however, take legal action against workers in some circumstances. Personnel may take legal action against staff that are industry exempt from the workers insurance program. Staff can sue fellow personnel if they were "outside the course of their employment" when the injury took place. An employee could be entitled to benefits under the insurance plan with respect to an injury or disease, and can also be entitled to take legal action against an individual in respect of the injury; for example, an individual driving in the course of their employment can take legal action against the driver of the vehicle that injured them.
